Shepherd's Hut. "Here is a shepherd's hut, constructed in a storm of snow, sleet, and pelting rain, at dead of night, and finished with the help of a stove and lamp, and ropes to steady the erection of the tall thatched roof. It is possible to pass the long hours of the winter's day, when the parts without are impassable. Solitude however, by a wise provision of Nature alone the reward of such an atonder.

Shepherd's Hut Here is a shepherd's hut half obscured in a storm of snow. Straw and provisions are stored in the loft, and below with the help of a stove and lamp and moss to stuff the crevices of the timbered walls it is possible to pass the long hours of the winter's day when the paths around are impassable. Seldom, however, is a man permitted to face alone the rigours of such an abode
